

Lifetime Eyecare Offers Big City Services in Rural Community

Friday, September 4, 2009

Dr. Robert Stamm and Dr. Dirk Gray, owners of the new Lifetime Eyecare, are proud to be a part of the growing downtown business community in McCook. "We owe a lot of our success and growth as a business to this great community of McCook and to all the businesses that make McCook the economic hub of Southwest Nebraska and Northwest Kansas."

"We opened our new doors in September 2007 with overwhelming support of the Chamber and all the great businesses and people of McCook. We could not have opened such a state-of-the art facility without the help of the Economic Development Committee and all the local trades involved in taking on a project of this magnitude. We are very proud to bring this state-of-the art eye care facility to the rural area of Southwest Nebraska." The technology utilized, the comprehensive care provided and the variety of services offered with this facility are unique to a rural community and not often found except for the major metropolitan areas.

Since opening the doors, Lifetime Eyecare has seen substantial growth in their business. They have hired three new staff members to support this growth. "Our goal at Lifetime Eyecare is to continue to be at the forefront of technology providing the most comprehensive eye care available for our community while continuing to promote the growth of downtown McCook. We are committed to being a vital part in sustaining economic growth of McCook and know that, by continuing to support our local chamber and businesses, we will insure McCook's stature as the key business hub of Southwest Nebraska and Northwest Kansas."
